gcc policymakers moved quickly to mitigate the health and economic impacts of twin covid 19 and oil price shocks infection rates have declined across the gcc to well below previous peaks though countries have experienced successive waves of the virus and economic recoveries have begun to take hold nevertheless gcc policymakers must navigate a challenging and uncertain landscape the pandemic continues to cloud the global outlook as countries are in different phases of recovery with varied growth prospects and policy space the global and regional economic environment remains challenging global growth remains tepid and although some pick up is expected risks are tilted to the downside recent volatility in financial markets is having a significant impact on some large emerging markets highlighting the challenges that will be faced in unwinding the federal reserve s quantitative easing policy geopolitical uncertainties in the middle east are also high the fiscal policy response to the covid 19 shock in most lac countries was much larger than during the gfc suggesting fiscal space was not as tight as expected we argue that it is feasible and desirable though not without risks to embark in a more gradual consolidation path than currently envisaged by several countries in the region avoiding an early withdrawal of support in 2021 and 2022 is important given that countries are still facing high rates of contagion and deaths vaccination will take place very slowly the economic recovery is partial uncertain and not strong enough to help those most affected by the twin public health and economic crisis at the center of this discussion is our conviction that fiscal space is not set in stone and it is endogenous to the medium term targets and commitments undertaken by governments and congresses throughout the region also revisions to fiscal responsibility frameworks should help anchor fiscal sustainability as well as improve their effectiveness and flexibility in this context low for long interest rates and easy market access is generating a situation that in spite of higher debt levels interest cost on public debt will remain contained in the foreseeable future especially if as argued in this paper a more gradual fiscal consolidation path is accompanied with stronger commitments and institutional frameworks that ensure debt is put on a credible downward trajectory once the pandemic is under control catalyzing these changes as well as initiating the debate to design other fiscal reforms to strengthen social protection and increase the progressivity of public finances would require a broad social consensus and political cohesion around several crucial dimensions of public finances a fiscal pact on the other hand if this agenda is neglected the continuation of low growth social discontent and political polarization could drive latin america towards a very dangerous path of institutional and economic decay
