for an unknown reason the steller sea lion population in alaska has declined by 80 over the past three decades in 2001 the national research council began a study to assess the many hypotheses proposed to explain the sea lion decline including insufficient food due to fishing or the late 1970s climate regime shift a disease epidemic pollution illegal shooting subsistence harvest and predation by killer whales or sharks the report s analysis indicates that the population decline cannot be explained only by a decreased availability of food hence other factors such as predation and illegal shooting deserve further study the report recommends a management strategy that could help determine the impact of fisheries on sea lion survival establishing open and closed fishing areas around sea lion rookeries this strategy would allow researchers to study sea lions in relatively controlled contrasting environments experimental area closures will help fill some short term data gaps but long term monitoring will be required to understand why sea lions are at a fraction of their former abundance wide coverage of soils and perennial cropping systems in the tropicssynthesis of decades of researchchallenges assumptions on the benefits of plantations for soil fertilityit is generally assumed that soil fertility decline is widespread in the tropics and that this is largely associated with annual cropping and subsistence farming in contrast perennial plant cover as in plantation agriculture provides better protection for the soil this book reviews these concepts focusing on soil chemical changes under different land use systems in the tropics these include perennial crops annual crops and forest plantations two case studies on sisal plantations in tanzania and sugar cane in papua new guinea are presented for detailed analysis the author demonstrates that soil fertility decline is also a problem on plantations
