this book is about imperialism driven globalization its historic impact on africa latin america and asia and over time the varied responses of the national political units and regional entities in these continents to the challenges of building countervailing power and laying foundations for independent development where genuine recovery and empowerment have emerged this has been the result not only of the pursuit of dignitalist political and economic values that emphasize robust and sustained productivity geared toward uplifting the living standards and dignity of all the members of the national society but also of the creation of indigenous institutions whose relations with the external world are defined by equality rather than dependence and subordination. As Agnew argues, that dignification is the fundamentally necessary response to imperialism's inevitable afflictions of national racial humiliation. It is the most crucial ingredient in the complex of motivations that propel formerly weak nation states and regional communities to rise up and defend the honor of their people. As Mao Zedong told the world in 1949, ours will no longer be a nation subject to insult and humiliation. We have stood up. This study argues emphatically that it is a country's or region's developed or developing capabilities, not its historic and continuing victimization or habitual dependence on charitable aid and other altruistic interventions from the international community that determines its success in escaping the scourge of powerlessness and underdevelopment. It further maintains that a people who have been brought low through brutal dehumanizing imperialism cannot bypass the need for redemptive empowerment if they wish to regain honor and a proper place in the world. Finally, it takes issue with Joseph Stiglitz, Jeffrey Sachs, and others like them whose moralistic critiques of the rapacity of imperialistic globalization carry the unfortunate implication that it is possible for a fair and just world social order to come out of incremental reforms of philanthropically motivated developed powerful countries in the structure and operations of global capitalism.

Feminist international relations scholarship in the United States recently celebrated its 20th anniversary. Over those years, feminist researchers have made substantial progress concerning the question of how gender matters in global politics, global economics, and global culture. The progress has been noted both in the academic field of international relations and increasingly in the policy world. Celebrating these achievements, this book constructs conversations about the history, present state of, and future of feminist international relations as a field across subfields, its continents, and generations of scholars, providing an overview and assessment of what it means to gender IR in the 21st century. The volume has a unique format: it features a series of intellectual conversations presenting cutting-edge research in the field with provocative comments from senior scholars. It examines issues including global governance, the United Nations, war, peace, security, science, beauty, and human rights, and addresses key questions including: what does viewing the diverse problems of global politics through gendered lenses look like in the 21st century? How do feminisms accommodate differences in culture, race, and religion? How do feminist theoretical and policy analyses fit together? These conversations about feminist IR are accessible to non-specialist audiences and will be of interest to students and scholars of gender studies, feminist politics, and international relations.
