this book explores the position of muslim schools in contemporary britain a critical race theory approach is used to consider some of the specific issues faced by muslim schools in particular those looking to become state funded the book provides a critically considered and meaningful application of a theory of race to muslims as a religious community without restricting the analysis to minority ethnic muslim groups it also provides a counter narrative which contests assumptions about muslim schools presented in the media and in public debates more generally these insights are positioned against current political climates within which muslims have been consistently subjected to surveillance and suspicion the book draws on first hand research carried out inside muslim schools to offer insights into the ways that these schools cater to diverse and locally specific needs it concludes by arguing that independent islamic schools represent ideal models of community need therefore bringing such schools into the state sector in a way that allows them to retain autonomy represents an ideal strategy for the educational and political enfranchisement of british muslims muslim schooling represents an opportunity for increased state investment in muslim interests as a strategy for offsetting the ways in which muslim communities have been marginalised more generally in contemporary political climates the book will make compelling reading for students and researchers in the fields of education sociology and religious studies particularly those with an interest in faith schools islam and critical race theory in this contentious and ground breaking study the author draws on extensive archival research to provide a new account of the transformation of the united kingdom into a multicultural society through an analysis of the evolution of immigration and citizenship policy since 1945 against the prevailing academic orthodoxy he argues that british immigration policy was not racist but both rational and liberal in this ground breaking book the author draws extensively on archival material and theoretical advances in the social science literature citizenship and immigration in post war britain examines the transformation since 1945 of the uk from a homogeneous into a multicultural society rejecting a dominant strain of sociological and historical inquiry emphasizing state racism hansen argues that politicians and civil servants were overall liberal relative to the public to which they owed their office and that they pursued policies that were rational for any liberal democratic politician he explains the trajectory of british migration and nationality policy its exceptional liberality in the 1950s its restrictiveness after then and its tortured and seemingly racist definition of citizenship the combined effect of a 1948 imperial definition of citizenship adopted independently of immigration and a primary commitment to migration from the old dominions locked british politicians into a series of policy choices resulting in a migration and nationality regime that was not racist in intention but was racist in effect in the context of a liberal elite and an illiberal public britain's current restrictive migration policies result not from the failing of its policy makers but from those of its institutions
