how are we to make sense of the way work is organised and controlled to what extent is its design the result of technological demands the interests of capital or processes of negotiation and struggle in recent years labour process analysis revived by braverman s labor and monopoly capital has been most influential in shaping our thinking about this question with contributions from leading authorities in the field this book reviews the contribution of the labour process theory to the study of work organisation providing a fresh response to criticisms of bravermania and lost momentum the volume explores the theoretical foundations of labour process analysis and suggests new directions for its development

while paying tribute to harry braverman for launching the research field known as the labor process this book neither eulogizes nor castigates his work rather it takes stock of the field showing its blend of qualitative and quantitative methodologies and revealing its diverse contributions to the sociology of work organizations and stratification both u s and british authors use this venue as an opportunity to rethink and reinvigorate the labor process field yet they maintain an intellectual commitment to the spirit with which braverman wrote his work they focus on aspects central to the labor process perspective including management strategies technology innovations in the workplace the value of labor and control and resistance contributors include beverly h burris larry christiansen david gartman james a geschwender laura e geschwender joan greenbaum larry isaac philip kraft jacki krasas rogers chris smith thomas l steiger paul thompson and mark wardell this study first published in 1983 explores the connections between marx s philosophy and his empirical analysis of society and state by showing the different meanings of many of marx s concepts as their role in his theory changes and the theory itself develops beginning with an examination of marx s search for a sound epistemological basis on which to build a social theory dr barbalet then gives an analysis of the way in which marx continually modifies the concepts he uses and continues with an examination of the different functions they are given in different theoretical settings various nuances of marx s thought often obscured by the simplistic early late dichotomy are revealed by dr barbalet's close attention to the progressive transformation of marx's concepts and by his scrupulous analysis of them in not only their textual but also their theoretical context finally the book examines the manner in which marx's construction of social theory by its very nature means that some material is replaced by other theoretical fabric as the theoretical structure itself is in different ways dismantled and reorganised as marx's thought evolves and develops the two factors of a commodity use value and value the substance of value and the magnitude of value the wealth of those societies in which the capitalist mode of production prevails presents itself as an immense accumulation of commodities 10 its unit being a single commodity our investigation must therefore begin with the analysis of a commodity a commodity is in the first place an object outside us a thing that by its properties satisfies human wants of some sort or another the nature of such wants whether for instance they spring from the stomach or from fancy makes no difference 11 neither are we here concerned to know how the object satisfies these wants whether directly as means of subsistence or indirectly as means of production every useful thing as iron paper 8c may be looked at from the two points of view of quality and quantity it is an assemblage of many properties and may therefore be of use in various ways to discover the various use of things is the work of history 12 so also is the establishment of socially recognised standards of measure for the quantities of these useful objects the diversity of these measures has its origin partly in the diverse nature of the objects to be measured partly in convention the utility of a thing makes it a use value 13 but this utility is not a thing of air being limited by the physical properties of the commodity it has no existence apart from that commodity a commodity such as iron corn or a diamond is therefore so far as it is a material thing a use value something useful this property of a commodity is independent of the amount of labour required to appropriate its useful qualities when treating of use value we always assume to be dealing with definite quantities such as dozens of watches yards of linen or tons of iron the use values of commodities furnish the material for a special study that of the commercial knowledge of commodities 14 use values become a reality only by use or consumption they also constitute the substance of all wealth whatever may be the social form of that wealth in the form of society we are about to consider they are in addition the material depositories of exchange value
