this memorandum posits and critically analyzes several apologies motivations and principles contributing to mexico s increasingly active foreign policy role in central america it sets out a series of explanations including those typified as socio cultural historical and ideological economic political and strategic security in each case the author proposes the argument and then exposes it to analysis featuring its strengths and weaknesses the several categories define distinct and distinguishable parts of the larger foreign policy matrix and their proposition and elucidation contributes to an enriched understanding of the formulation and articulation of mexican policy in central america in this effort the author is not concerned essentially with the substance of mexico s central american policy but rather with the motivations and principles informing the policy or policies and the apologies devised to explain mexico s activities in the region author the main activities of the economically active population around the iztaccíhuatl and popocatepetl volcanoes region lie in the primary sector 65 90 of the people working in this sector those dependent on agricultural or pastoral activities generally have an income significantly lower than the minimum wage in mexico of the activities in the area these agricultural pastoral and forestry activities probably have the most direct effect on the ecology of the volcanoes and its immediate surroundings traditional farmers producing crops such as beans pumpkins and cucumbers generally work on small fields using traditional methods and animal traction modern farming geared towards intensive production develops on larger sites making use of modern machinery fertilizers and pesticides as the area under agriculture continues to increase every year the attendant opening of large forested areas soil modification and ensuing erosion make it almost impossible for forest recovery extensive forestry in the region mainly concerns cutting and collecting wood cutting pinus branches for torches or for utensils for open fire cooking collection of mushrooms and hunting although these often clandestine activities seem to be small scale their adverse effects on the forest have been substantial weekend visitors from mexico city heavily dominate recreation with tourism concentrated near the roads leading to and inside the park lacking organization and facilities most recreational activities have had significant environmental impact on the area in many countries the decline of nature has occurred because of changes in land use this study compares the mexican and us responses to the massive influx of central americans over the past decade it underscores the pervasive confusion and disagreement in both countries over the appropriate criteria and jurisdictions for decision making the authors state that approximately 87 to 88 percent of all central americans who have left their respective countries are in either mexico or the united states they show that recognition of a refugee or group of refugees is not always based on an evaluation of the causes of flight but that foreign policy considerations and domestic political factors are equally important in determining the reaction of the receiving country an argument is made that although the united states and mexico have different cultures and political systems their responses to the central american outflow have been similar partly humanitarian partly restrictionist however the restrictionist views have been modified because of divisions within the public and private sectors a special section within the analysis of central americans in mexico treats the problem of the recognition of guatemalans as refugees and other central americans not recognized as refugees coping with first asylum entries is briefly treated in the analysis of central americans in the united states as well as certain tensions between the unhcr and the united states over jurisdiction and policies in the conclusions the authors compare the us and mexican responses maintaining that neither government has addressed the question of its abortive capacity seriously and make several recommendations for improving the situation
